A RAINBOW is an avant-garde rarity that cannot be purchased anywhere. It was born by blinking, and discovered by Iris, daughter of Pupil. The entrance is rounded trellis with garlanding roses and nearby yew. It can be measured only by a 3 minute egg more or less. It's covered with all sorts of springly flowers including proses and curves and different kinds of edible spores which can be conserved by prickling, then jarring, then carefoolly labelling. Strangely enough these are to be eaten grazenlee. It is dwelt by Motish people and whizzartists who enjoy disguising in Piarrots and who see us specularly. They communicate harmonically par hazard. They dye themselves in morning screams and they hate to be boxed in. They yearn for éclat d'amusement; at night they go out dancing, they play hyde and sick, they fleurt and they laugh all the time: one can tell just looking at them, specularly of course. Beware though! they might pout and shout when not in the right spectacularity. They exchange visits with the stars in sleepwalking when they do not practice lassoooing and windsurf. They are retained decidedly unsentimental for lack of "presence", though strangely they fall in love each Autumn. They are not permanent. They try to practice the philosophy of pragmatism. Besides, pleasure is utterance, wisdom is silence! That seems to be a law there. They do love poetry from the elusive blind Homer on to the zenfool E.E.C., ecc., etc. They aroused interest in many an artist. Cage, invited for a performance, remained placid (of course!), Duchamp played chess with RRose c'est la vie, Lewis Carroll, alias Dodo, felt at home there and stared at the quizzical colico grinning owl appearing and disappearing. Dada idem, and felt just fine! Gertrude Stein wrote more about Alice, Picasso painted it in his own cubist way and Charlie Chaplin invented new gagas eating it with a spoon while a-skipping along all the way through...

WOW! That's how David Cole, alias Dada, dadapoetically and playfoolly visualized a RAINBOW !
